THE RETURNED MINIATURE.
Picture!—thou troublest me!

Thou hast been cherished in a maiden's breast,
Thou little eyes have looked upon her heart—
Her hands have pressed thee, and her lips caressed
Thy smooth, cold cheek, all senseless as thou art;
She wore no ruse, nor her soul with thee,
Come tell me picture what thine eyes did see.

I saw a bosom full of secret pride,
A heart of vanity, a soul of pride:
A maid to trifle with its joys awhile,
Then like a weaver bade thou from them slide;
Still burning for new triumphs, anxious still
To hear thy story told to some other girl.

Thou slenderest, picture—she did always seem
The meekest, purest angel of the earth—
So gentle and so trusting, you might deem
She had no thought but showed its very birth;
I fear thy stay hath been almost in vain—
Open thy lips, oh picture—speak again.

I lay beneath thy pillow when she slept,
And saw the victim of the night go by—
I saw the light, I felt the tears she wept,
I heard the muffled name, the gentle sigh;
As hour by hour her dreams dissolved away,
And hour by hour returned as fresh and gay.

And such hath been her life—on one she smiled,
Who bowed upon her hand, and sought her love:
The poor fond man went forth and was beguiled
By the soft accents of his murmuring dove,
A veil swept o'er the sun, and round him lay
Shadows of altered clouds, no longer gay.

Another came, and fondly breathed his vow,
And laid his offering down before her shrine—
She charmed him with her smiles and sunny brow,
With many a glance, and many a flitting sign;
But when his love could brook no more delay,
She coldly sent him on his lonely way.

Thou wert the last, and now time hour hath come,
And spurned and slighted, I return to thee,
My head is dizzy with the countless hum
Of flitting insects round a blooming tree;
Where one fond welcome every wanderer meets,
And every wing seems laden with sweets.

Oh! I send me forth, my master never more,
But to a gentle and confiding breast,
Where I may nestle in the bosom's core,
Alone, without a rival to molest;
And let the temple of that spirit be
A holy resting place and shrine for me!

THE ABATE DIAMOND.

In the notice of diamonds, which appeared in our last week's Journal, no mention was made of the largest diamond in the world, the Abate, so called from the river of that name, in which it was discovered, in the Brazils, about 70 years ago. This gem weighs 1680 carats, and has been estimated by competent judges to be worth 200 millions sterling. So romantic is the history of its discovery, that, if only slightly embellished by the aid of fiction, it would form the ground-work of an interesting tale. Three Mineros, (inhabitants of the province of Minas) convicted of smuggling gold, were doomed, by a sentence of the Viceroy, to perpetual banishment in the wildest and most uninhabited part of the province of Minas Geraes, which at that time was still unclaimed from the Indians, or the wild denizens of the forest. For upwards of five years these men dragged on a miserable existence, supported by the hope of discovering some rich gold formation that would purchase a remission of their sentence. In the sixth year, one of those excessive droughts which so frequently devastate the interior provinces of Brazil, left dry the bed of the river Abate. The three exiles accordingly descended into it in order to search among the Cascalho (alluvial soil) for gold.

After a very short search, they discovered the diamond in question. At first, from its extraordinary size, they conceived it to be only a crystal, but one of the party, who possessed some knowledge of mineralogy, was convinced from its geometric form and peculiar brilliancy, that it was a diamond of prodigious value. Overjoyed at their good fortune, they resolved to proceed at all hazards to the nearest presidency. They did so, and on their arrival, exhibited their gem to the Commandante and the Vegario, the latter of whom immediately set out for Villa Rica, the capital of the province, where, on inspection by the Directors of the College of Diamonds, it was pronounced to be a brilliant of the finest water. A frigate was immediately despatched to Lisbon with the glittering prize—the Vegario received a valuable church preferment, and the exiles a full pardon. This diamond has never been cut: the Court of Portugal, from its immense value, being unwilling to trust it for that purpose into the hands of a lapidary; but his late Majesty, John the Sixth, had a hole drilled through it, in order to enable him to wear it suspended round his royal neck on gala days.

What has become of this inestimable gem, we know not. When the Court of Portugal emigrated to Brazil, it returned with them to its native country; and on the return of Don John to his European dominions, it again crossed the Atlantic; but whether it was among the Crown jewels given up by Miguel, on the termination of the late contest in Portugal, or whether it has been pledged by him in order to raise the sinews of war, has not yet transpired.

No monarch had so splendid a collection of diamonds as the late King of Portugal. It was quite a hobby-horse with this good natured though imbecile monarch. On the top of the Imperial Crown of Brazil, used at the Coronation of Don Pedro, there was a diamond the size of a pigeon's egg, of the finest lustre; the sceptre was likewise surmounted by one almost its equal in size; while the hilt of the sword was totally covered with these brilliant gems. On the evening of the day of his coronation, the Emperor and his Imperial Consort graced the Opera house with their presence. On this occasion, Don Pedro, over his splendid uniform, stiff with gold embroidery and emblazoned with stars and orders, wore a large pair of diamond epaulettes, which, by their extraordinary lustre, fairly dazzled the eyes of the spectators.—London Court Jour.

Most of the music is entirely new, and has been drawn from the highest sources of musical taste and science in Europe, especially in Germany. "They find it the most interesting and useful collection of Church Music with which they are acquainted.—Singers in Rev Dr. Sharp's (Baptist) Church."

"While it has been so long in circulation, and has received so cordial approbation of the congregation, and the music is more highly estimated than ever."

It is highly appreciated by the congregation and is moreover interesting and pleasing to the performers. * * The whole constitutes a collection superior, in our estimation, to any before the public.—Singers of the Church of the Messiah, New York.

After fully trying and using it for some time, they have no hesitation in saying they think it a most valuable work and admirably adapted to sustain that degree of interest amongst the singers, and of countenance and support from the congregation, which is indispensable to good music.—Singers of Salem Street Church.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1834.

Juvenile Depravity.—The Portland Courier of the 11th inst. contains a report of a case recently tried before Judge Emery, at that place, which, when we consider the youth of the culprit, the extreme cruelty of the acts perpetrated, and the novel ground taken by the defendants counsel,—is one of unusual interest.—The case alluded to is that of The State vs Major Mitchell, (a boy between 10 and 11 years of age) for maiming David F. Crawford (aged 7 1-2 years).—From the evidence of the injured boy, which is given in a very artless, and apparently candid manner, it appears that Major compelled him to go with him after some sweet flag, by threatening to whip him if he refused—that when he got him into the fields, he twice threw him down and beat him—that when David was rescued from him by a third person and sent home, Major intercepted him by crossing the fields, took him by the collar, forced him through a corn-field into a piece of woods, beat him severely, and then dragged him to an adjacent brook, and put him in. David crawled out upon his hands and knees, when Major seized him, tore off all his clothes—tied his hands upwards with withes to two trees, one to each tree, and then took off his suspenders and tied his feet with them. He made him eat brakes and boxberry leaves and put a handful of mud into his mouth, and when he spat it out because he could not swallow it, he whipped him for it. Major then perpetrated the cruel and revolting maiming, while his victim was tied to the trees—then untied him, and dragging him to where a tree had been blown down, beat him with a club upon his face, and put him under the roots of the tree. He then carried him to the brook and threw him in, where it was about knee deep, and tried to hold his head under water, but he got away and got out. Major then promised if he would help him build a dam, he would let him go and when the work was completed, told him to "clear for home." David being unable to find his clothes, went home naked, and upon his arrival there, as testified by his mother, "was a gore of blood from his nose to his instep." At the time when he was tied to the trees, Major whipped him with six or more sticks,—told him he was going to give him 100 blows, and bid him count them. They both counted together up to 38, when Major could count no further, and David counted and skipped some. During the maiming, which was effected by the aid of a piece of tin, David "did not cry hardly a mite," because Major threatened to whip him harder if he did—although he suffered excruciating pain, he bore it in silence, so great was his fear of the young devil who was murdering him by inches. David was confined to the house above a week before he went out at all, and for two or three days his recovery was doubtful. In something over a fortnight he went to school.

Several other witnesses were called, who testified to Major's bad character, generally—but to his ability to distinguish between right and wrong, and his consequent ability to be guilty, in the eye of the law, of crime.

JOHN NEAL, Esq., the defendant's counsel, stated that he should expect to prove that the prisoner had received early in life an injury upon the skull, that the functions of the brain had become thereby disturbed—and that the formation of the skull indicated that the prisoner possessed certain bumps or prominences called in Phrenology, destructiveness, and that the prisoner was on these grounds incapable of crime in the eyes of the law. Among the witnesses introduced in the defence, were Doctors Bartlett, Barrett and Mighles. Dr BARTLETT had examined the prisoner's head—discovered a depression on the top of it—no very uncommon one—no sign of injury to the head.—Dr BARRETT had also examined the prisoner's head—should think there was an unusual depression about the junction of the parietal and frontal bones—don't know as he should have inferred injury to the skull from its appearance. The idea of injury might or might not have occurred to him. Dr MIGHLES, was a phrenologist, and had examined the prisoner's head; there was a greater want of symmetry in it, than usual—should think the depression on the top of the head was a congenital one—never knew an instance where a blow on the head changed the character of an individual—it might, however, produce inflammation, and thus disturb the functions of the brain. Here an attempt was made to introduce evidence of certain elevations and depressions of the skull of the prisoner; and their tendency and influence on the conduct, &c., according to the system of Phrenology, but the Judge interrupted—he cared nothing about Phrenology, and only wanted the witness' opinion as a Physician and Surgeon. The witness did not know, as a Surgeon, what would be the effect of the enlargement above the ear. It would, if Phrenology be true, be of a character which might exasperate in the mind the feeling of destructiveness.

The Attorney General cited several authorities as to the capacity of a boy of prisoner's age to commit crime—and after an able charge from the Judge, the jury retired, and in about ten minutes, returned a verdict of GUILTY. The prisoner was subsequently sentenced to nine years hard labor in the State Prison.

New York Election.—SAMUEL BEARDSLEY, against whom so great a clamor was raised by the Bank press, by publishing a partial extract of his deposit speech—"perish credit, perish commerce"—has succeeded in his election for Congress, by an increased majority. For Mr Beardsley, "much interest was felt by all the friends of our free institutions—his intrepidity during the storm, his devotion to the cause of the people, and the tremendous efforts used to crush him for the utterance of one of the noblest sentiments ever spoken in our legislative halls, drew general attention to his district—and had he failed, our opponents would have been as pleased as we are now."

Messrs Lemaire and Isenbeck, teachers of music, and organists, will remain in this city for the present, for the purpose of practising their profession as teachers. Gentlemen better qualified to judge of their abilities than ourselves, affirm that they are well educated musicians, and excellent teachers. We hope they will meet with liberal encouragement.

Chivalry.—He of the Commercial Gazette has thrown down his glove in behalf of the persecuted Mr George Poindexter, and denounces all who say aught against this immaculate gentleman, as "minions" and "scrubs," and dooms the press that publishes it to obscurity. He says "the Honorable Mr Poindexter requires no act of championship at his hands;" lucky for him that he does not, for the Editor of the Gazette would not lose a bowl of soup to save any man from annihilation. It becomes the Gazette to talk of the obscurity of a Press which publishes four times as many numbers daily as it does itself, and whose country circulation is in the same ratio. But the changeling whose principles are in proportion to his interest, does not stop at anything; "one renegade is worse than ten Turks;" yet we should not have thought he would have alluded to "the man who had had his domestic relations assailed by the tongue of slander"—perhaps the enthusiastic Whig Editor of the Gazette, who joined that party because he was convinced they had the most patronage to bestow, does not recollect the vilest of all vile abuse which was heaped upon Mrs Jackson until she was driven, broken-hearted, into the grave, and that even there her ashes have been disturbed, and the sacredness of the tomb violated, by the injured Mr Poindexter! The honorable gentleman's claims to forbearance are as small as the Gazette's to political integrity, or manly independence.

Whig Legislators from Boston.—Great things are anticipated from our City Representatives, at the ensuing session. One of them will probably renew his old proposition for intermarrying the whites with the blacks, out of gratitude to the latter for turning the election in favor of the Whig ticket.

Our quondam friend D. will endeavor to get through the House "An Act to promote the manufacture of Weathercocks, and for the better encouragement of twisting, turning, and other mechanical processes in the arts."

The Aldermen Legislators, it is confidently expected by the wharfingers, will propose an alteration in the City Charter, by which all persons shall be disqualified from holding the office of Alderman, unless they shall previously qualify themselves by entering into the Lumber and Grain trade.

The veteran Major will signalize his knowledge of the international code, by proposing such an alteration in Law of Nations as will tend to encourage the formation of Northern Confederacies in time of war.

The intended labors at the Senate bar we shall notice, when the rumors on that subject shall be more definite than at present.

In Dock Square, near Faneuil Hall, the reader will find a large Omnibus, full of curiosities of different kinds, and belonging to a Mr Dexter, a man totally blind and with but one arm, who depends upon the proceeds of the exhibition for support. One of the best automaton exhibitions we have ever seen, is fitted up at one end of the Omnibus—representing rope dancers, waltzers, house-wives, gentlemen of leisure, military companies, and professors of the mechanic arts. The object of the exhibition is praiseworthy, and a look at the articles exhibited well worth the nine-penny-bit it costs.

The Constellation, a paper published at Petersburg, Va., has commenced the publication of the "Wandering Piper's" letters, with which the author has furnished the Editor. The following anecdote, which occurred at the commencement of his journey, may be worth reading:—

"I passed through Drumhilt's, Laurance-kirk, and Auchenclea, without ever unloosing my musical wallet, and arrived at the village of Tettertain, in the evening, where I was obliged to take up my quarters for the night. The landlord of the inn, who, with reverence be it spoken, was as drunk as a piper, pretended to know me for some great personage, although he could not, he said, 'condescend as to particulars,' but, at all events, I should get such usage in his house, as I would not meet with his like again in all my travels. In this respect I believe he spoke the truth; for I got such a poor supper, and such a bad bed, that the meanest beggar in Scotland would hardly have thanked him for the entertainment, and the bill was so high charged, that the first lord in the land would not have been disgraced by it. I left the subjoined lines in the mean dirty stall where I slept:

A piper, worn with care and age,
Was lodg'd a night in this vile cage;
As close and hot as satan's regions,
And fill'd with fleas in num'ro's legions;

Let never traveller any more,
Set foot within this cabin door."

TRIAL OF THE SPANISH PIRATES.

The Court met at 9 A. M., when D. L. Child, Esq., opened the cross-examination, which he prosecuted with extraordinary minuteness and indefatigable zeal, till the adjournment of the court. During this cross-examination, several additional facts, relative to the proceedings of the pirate crew, were elicited, in confirmation of what he testified to on the examination in chief, on Wednesday; while on his other hand, some of his statements seemed to militate with his previous testimony.

Joseph Perez.—[cross-ex.] The cargo of our schooner consisted of 60 pipes new rum—bales of clothing, 30 bundles, all sizes—some dry goods—pieces of cloth—250 muskets—powder—flints—boxes of swords and cutlasses—1 barrel knives—2 boxes axes—beads, necklaces—I shipped for $20 per month—able seamen had $25. * * * It is customary in all vessels going and returning from the coast of Africa to have a man in the tops—the Pinda was painted black with a white streak—billet head—before she left Nazareth, the billet head was taken off, and an awkward piece of wood put on—we made her a two-topsail schooner—she left Havana a foretopsail schooner—3 or 4 days after the robbery she put up her maintop—saw an hermaphrodite brig while we were robbing the Mexican—then a ship, which we ran away from—some of the sailors said she was a man-of-war—don't know whether she chased us or not, but she came nearer—saw the captain take a pistol, which came from the American brig, out of the 3d mate's hand, and throw it overboard—Capt Gibert said he did not want any such thing on board—wanted nothing but money. * * * The 3d mate had a sword—the sailors had knives ground sharp at the point, like daggers—it is customary to give the men jackknives, but the men themselves bring long knives in their bags. * * *

That day the captain said to the men—"Boys take off your hats and put on your caps, and change about." Those that were obedient took their hats off, and those who were not kept theirs on. * * * I cannot read Spanish, much less English—all the letters of the alphabet which I know is, P, D, O, and U, [witness then explained that he meant written or Italian characters—he succeeded in making out nearly all the letters in print, and read a number of words correctly in the Spanish translation of the indictment.] I want to tell how I got $250—the boatswain 500—Delgado 300—Montenegro 250, and the mate $2,400—he confessed his guilt in Sierra Leon, [at this point the witness spoke so fast that it was impossible to interpret, or take down his testimony—he was therefore repeatedly interrupted, till losing all patience, he exclaimed in English—"I will say, and by G-d I will"—and when checked again, misunderstood a remark, and drew the inference that he was rendering himself liable to the same punishment as the other prisoners, by what he was testifying. He in consequence became excited, and was made quite frantic by Capt. Gibert's remarking to him, that he took him on board of his schooner out of charity. The interpreters were requested to take him out and tranquilize him, by an explanation. When they returned Judge Story requested the interpreters to assure him, if laboring under any delusion of danger, of his perfect safety. Mr Child objected to any such intimation being given, but Mr Dunlap moved that he be assured that the faith and honor of the government pledged to him by its legal officers, should be faithfully kept. Mr Child replied, with great vehemence, to this motion, and concluding by saying—"I believe the unhappy men at this bar are totally innocent of the crime they are charged with—I believe them to be the victims of one of the foulest plots that was ever contrived." The assurance, however, was given, and the confidence of the witness being restored he proceeded.

* * * There was nothing said about dividing the money till the English had taken the schooner. The captain had $4000 of the money in his trunk when he ran her ashore. * * * The captain brought a watch, valued at $400, and a shaving machine, worth $400, from Donna Lola, whom they were brought with the stolen money, because the vessel had not a quarter of a cent, when she left Havana—was captain's steward. * * * The negro interpreter took the money the captain had, at the time the English came to Nazareth, and hid it in his own yard—we buried $11,000 at Cape Lopez—don't recollect the day we dug it up again—left $5000 for the captain—don't recollect the day, because he was so afraid of being made a prisoner—had never been in such a dirty scrape before—we five that went to Fernando Po threw our money overboard, because the boatswain said it would be our own condemnation—when the captain called me to receive my share of the money, it was laying by his side on the floor—$250—he said, "You may want a little money to buy clothes, and you may go, as you have been wanting to go this long time." The captain had a knife in his bosom—I believe his intention was to kill any one who refused to take his share of the money—the boatswain had $500—Garcia $400—Castillo $250—Montenegro $250—Delgado $300—the mate, De Soto, $2,400—the 3d mate ran away at Lopez, and the captain sent him $1000, by the carpenter—there was no rule agreed upon for dividing the money—the captain was the sole owner, and did as he had a mind to with it—he had one lot of $4000, and another of $5000—don't know what became of the rest. * * *

When carpenter failed to blow up the schooner on the beach, captain asked why he did not spread powder on the deck, tie a string to the lock of the gun, and as he rowed ashore give it a slant, and thus fire it off among the powder on the deck, and so set fire to her—had purchased 60 slaves—the schooner was to carry 450 slaves. * * * At Fernando Po, I denied that I belonged to the Pinda at first, but when put under oath I confessed that I did belong to her—by advice of boatswain, we agreed to say we belonged to the Spanish brig Little Negro, which was cast away—the boatswain continued to say so, till confronted by a Portuguese, who had seen him on board of the Pinda, when he owned it—when examined there I was put into a room by myself—Delgado also confessed—the Governor made him sign a paper—they never offered me anything—it was my own fear that made me declare—they said if I lied, and it turned out that I belonged to the Pinda, I should be hung—my heart failed me, and I told the whole story. They had a newspaper there containing an account of the robbery of the Mexican. When I spoke of the $20,000, one of the clerks took up the paper, and said "True," and threw it down on the table.

The preceding abstract embraces the main facts, and a general outline of the cross examination of Perez, so far as it has advanced. At four in the afternoon the witness, having been subjected for the space of seven hours, to a most pressing and scrutinizing investigation, became exhausted and irritated, and Mr Dunlap interrupted it by a motion to adjourn. Adjourned.

The following extraordinary incident and miraculous escape appears in the Lexington (Ky.) Observer:—"A gentleman in the neighborhood of this city, in riding across his farm a few days since, was suddenly surprised and alarmed to find his horse gradually sinking into the earth. He instantly leaped from the animal, and by so doing his own life was providentially saved. The horse continued to sink lower and lower into the earth, until he had descended one hundred and fifty feet. At this point, he became wedged between masses of rock, and was crushed to death. The chasm or fissure, we are told, appears to have been formed by the separation of the earth and rock in some convulsion of nature. The width of the fissure at the surface we have not learned, but it was covered with a thin soil, which commenced giving away as soon as the weight of the gentleman and his horse was added to it."

Samuel L. Southard.—It is not so generally known as it should be, that the vindictive spirit in which Mr Southard keeps up his abuse of the President, arises from a private transaction between them, which took place in July, 1826. Mr Southard then made assertions relative to general Jackson, which produced a correspondence between them. The general demanded Mr S.'s author, and Mr S. as usual, twisted, turned, winced, looked impudent, and said, in amount, that he had, and that he had not, made the assertions alluded to—that he had, and had not, an author for them—that his conversation was "unofficial," and that, (the whopper!) he meant the general no harm! The general could not do other than despise him—he told him as much—buttoned the falsehood on the then Secretary's lips, and left him. That falsehood has cankered there, and every thing that has passed out of those lips since, touching the President, has been putrescent.—Trenton Emporium.

Steamboat Lost.—A letter from Lake Providence under date of the 8th, says:

"I am sorry to have to advise you of the total loss of the steamboat Return, on the 6th inst. She struck something, as yet unknown, in crossing the bar at the head of Stock Island, and hung on the same. She leaked so fast, that the exertions of the crew and many of the passengers availed nothing—in one hour she was nearly broken in two—some of the furniture was got off, and we are endeavoring to save a part of the engine—passengers and crew safe."—Philad. Inq.

Uncommon Occurrence.—On Thursday last some persons were opening an old well in Hawkins street, for the purpose of placing in it a suction pipe. Before any attempt was made to descend, a light was brought, in order, by letting it down, to ascertain whether the air was fit for respiration. The moment the light was held over the well an instantaneous combustion took place, emitting a light blue flame, accompanied with intense heat, and burning the ground and buildings for some rods around. Two men who were standing at the top of the well were considerably scorched and blistered.—N. Y. Daily Ad.

Singular suit for damages.—The editor of the Painesville (Ohio) Telegraph has been sued and cast in damages of $53.41, for printing the name of a lawyer thus, "isac paine"—the lawyer putting forth, in his plea for damages, that it was a libel, and signified that he was a man of "mean and small capacity."—*N. Making Green Tea out of Black.—A great fraud has been detected in England among the dealers in tea—large quantities of common Congo, or black tea, having, by a chemical process, been changed to green, and sold for Hyson.—Id.

What is Law like?—Law is like a country dance—people are led up and down in it till they are fairly tired out. Law is like a book of surgery—there are a great many terrible cases in it. It is like physics, too—those that take the least of it are best off. It is like a homely gentleman—very well to follow, and like a scolding wife—very bad when it follows us. Law is like a new fashion—people are bewitched to get into it; and like bad weather—most people are glad to get out of it.

Like Penitent, like Priest.—In the new novel of Henri Quatre, is the following dialogue, at the confessional, between a fat monk and a fat penitent:—"Bouillon—Father, I have eaten many a fattened capon beyond the sufficiency of nature."

OBITUARY.
Died, in this city, on the 7th instant, William H, eldest son of Mr Hosea Sargent, aged 17 years.
In being thus early cut off in the prime of life, he has left behind many friends who will sincerely mourn his loss; during the short time he was a sojourner among us, he gained the esteem of his young acquaintances for his manly and free hearted actions, and his loss will be sorely felt; yet it is not a solemn warning to those young friends he has left, "to be prepared?" does not in a voice, on thinking of his death, seem to say, "be ready?"
Should not the thought of hearing this voice dwell uppermost in their minds, and make them prepare to follow; many who are now in as good health as he was a year since, may a year hence be slumbering in the cold arms of death, and when their time shall come, may they go as happy and contented as the subject of this notice did.
The best respects of the young friends are offered to the distressed parents, for the loss of their beloved son, and it is hoped they may find a consolation in knowing that the virtues of the deceased, will not soon be forgotten by them.
